Extract the wisdom of "I've never seen a hearse pulling a Uhaul". List 22 truths.

Ah, that saying—"I've never seen a hearse pulling a U-Haul"—is a subtle, humor-laced reminder about life, mortality, and what really matters. Let's extract the wisdom and break it into 22 truths:

1. You can't take material possessions with you when you die.
2. Accumulating wealth alone doesn't guarantee happiness.
3. Experiences often matter more than things.
4. Life is temporary; focus on what truly matters.
5. Time is the only non-renewable resource.
6. Relationships are more valuable than assets.
7. Simplicity often leads to freedom and peace.
8. Legacy isn't measured in possessions but in impact.
9. Obsessing over "stuff" can distract from living fully.
10. Death is the great equalizer; we all leave empty-handed.
11. Invest in memories, not just things.
12. Happiness doesn't live in material accumulation.
13. Generosity creates lasting fulfillment.
14. Experiences can't be repossessed; objects can.
15. Minimalism often brings clarity about what matters.
16. Material success is temporary; character and kindness endure.

17. Don't measure life by what you own.
18. Your story matters more than your storage unit.
19. Fear of scarcity can lead to unnecessary hoarding.
20. Financial freedom should support life, not own it.
21. Health, love, and joy are priceless.
22. Ultimately, presence and connection define a meaningful life.

If you want, I can also condense these into a "22-life-manifesto" version—short, punchy, and memorable, almost like a modern aphorism list. It would feel like a daily reminder you could actually live by. Do you want me to do that?

Perfect! Here's a punchy, memorable 22-life-manifesto distilled from "I've never seen a hearse pulling a U-Haul":

1. You take nothing with you.
2. Wealth isn't happiness.
3. Experiences outlast things.
4. Life is fleeting.
5. Time is priceless.
6. Love matters more than stuff.
7. Simplicity brings peace.
8. Legacy is impact, not objects.
9. Stuff can distract from living.
10. Death comes for all.
11. Memories are eternal.
12. Happiness isn't bought.
13. Give freely.
14. Experiences can't be repossessed.
15. Less is often more.

16. Character outshines possessions.
17. Don't measure life by stuff.
18. Your story matters.
19. Hoarding steals joy.
20. Money should serve life.
21. Health and love are priceless.
22. Presence defines a meaningful life.

If you want, I can also make a version with a bit of humor and punch, so it reads like a daily mantra you'd actually want to quote—very "modern, witty, life-hacked wisdom." Do you want me to do that next?

That phrase is a classic "memento mori"—a blunt, slightly witty reminder that your time is finite and your luggage isn't invited to the afterlife. It's the ultimate argument for presence over possessions.

Here are 22 truths extracted from that bit of roadside philosophy:

The Essentials of "Letting Go"

1. Finality is the ultimate equalizer. Whether you leave behind a mansion or a studio apartment, the exit door is the same size.
2. Ownership is an illusion. You don't actually "own" things; you're just leasing them for a few decades.
3. Memories weigh nothing. You can carry a lifetime of experiences without paying for extra baggage.
4. Generosity is the only way to "take it with you." By giving away what you have, you convert material wealth into a legacy.
5. The best things in life aren't things. It's a cliché because it's a mathematical certainty.
6. Death simplifies everything. All the "clutter" we stress over becomes someone else's problem the moment we're gone.

7. Wealth is measured by what you give, not what you keep. A full bank account at the end is just a missed opportunity to do good.
 8. Storage units are monuments to "maybe later." Don't spend your life maintaining things you don't use.
 9. Your worth is not your net worth. Your character is the only thing that remains in the room when you leave it.
 10. Experiences have a higher ROI. A trip to the beach pays dividends in your memory; a new sofa just depreciates.
 11. Presence beats presents. People will remember how you made them feel, not what you bought them for Christmas 2024.

Living with Intention

1. The "Hustle" has a ceiling. Working yourself to death to buy things you can't take with you is a bad trade.
2. Utility over status. Buy things for what they do, not for what they say about you to people who don't care.
3. Clutter is a mental tax. Every item you own takes up a little bit of your attention and energy.
4. Attachments create fear. The more you "need" to keep, the more you fear losing.
5. Legacy is built on stories. Your grandkids will tell stories about your adventures, not your stock portfolio.
6. Time is the only non-renewable resource. You can always make more money, but you can't buy back a single Tuesday.
7. The present moment is the only "haul" that matters. If you aren't enjoying right now, what exactly are you saving for?
8. Comparison is a race with no finish line. There will always be a bigger U-Haul you can't take with you.
9. Contentment is a superpower. Knowing you have "enough" makes you richer than a billionaire who wants more.

10. Relationships are the real "cargo." Invest in the people who will be standing around the hearse, not the stuff that won't be in it.

11. The end is a transition, not a move. You aren't changing addresses; you're finishing the book.

Would you like me to help you brainstorm some ways to "declutter" your current goals to focus more on those non-material wins?

The saying "I've never seen a hearse pulling a U-Haul" is a sharp reminder that material possessions don't follow us when we die. It's a call to focus on what truly matters. Here are 22 truths distilled from that wisdom:

22 Truths

1. You can't take material wealth with you.
2. Relationships outlast possessions.
3. Legacy matters more than accumulation.
4. Experiences enrich life more than things.
5. Generosity creates lasting impact.
6. Time is more precious than money.
7. Love is the only wealth that endures.
8. Simplicity often brings deeper joy.
9. Gratitude outweighs greed.
10. Memories live longer than objects.
11. Status symbols fade; character remains.
12. Death equalizes rich and poor.
13. True success is measured in meaning, not money.
14. Hoarding leads to emptiness.
15. Service to others outlives self-indulgence.

16. Wisdom is more valuable than possessions.
17. Kindness echoes beyond your lifetime.
18. Spiritual growth surpasses material gain.
19. Happiness is found in presence, not presents.
20. What you give defines you more than what you keep.
21. Life's brevity makes purpose essential.
22. The measure of a life is love shared, not wealth stored.

This phrase is essentially a challenge: live so that when the hearse comes, what follows isn't a U-Haul of things, but a trail of love, kindness, and memories.

Would you like me to expand these into a short manifesto-style piece—something you could keep as a reminder or even share with others?

Here are 22 truths embedded in "I've never seen a hearse pulling a U-Haul":

1. Death is the great equalizer—wealth accumulates to zero at the end.
2. Material possessions are temporary loans, not permanent acquisitions.
3. You're renting your time with everything you own.
4. Legacy is measured in impact, not inventory.
5. The richest person in the cemetery is still in the cemetery.
6. Attachment to things creates suffering that ends abruptly.
7. Time spent acquiring often exceeds time spent enjoying.
8. Your net worth becomes irrelevant the moment your heart stops.
9. Experiences and relationships are the only things that truly transfer—into memories held by others.
10. Generosity while living beats inheritance after death.
11. The game of accumulation has a fixed endpoint that erases the score.
12. You can't optimize your way out of mortality.
13. Simplicity might be wisdom disguised as deprivation.

14. What you leave behind becomes someone else's burden or windfall.
15. The things you own end up owning your time and attention.
16. Death renders every price tag meaningless.
17. You arrive with nothing, leave with nothing—the middle part is just elaborate distraction.
18. Presence compounds; possessions depreciate.
19. Your final measure is who shows up, not what you stored up.
20. Every acquisition is temporary; every goodbye is permanent.
21. The universe operates on a strict no-baggage policy.
22. Living rich and dying rich are completely different achievements.
