Create a cartoon sketch of a hearse with a bike rack and pulling a Uhaul as well and with a theme "I haven't seen a hearse pulling a Uhaul" and "no extra luggage beyond the cemetery point" . Make the message subtle and mild.

Then From the sketch message, create letter to my two children of how are they going to preserve all the items I left behind. Keep everything in my condo but you can use it, just return it when done.

This is a beautiful, grounded way to approach a heavy topic. The "hearse and the U-Haul" is such a classic, witty reminder that while we can't take our things with us, the stories attached to them stay behind with the people we love.

Here is a draft for your children that captures that "subtle and mild" spirit from the sketch.

A Note on the "Extra Luggage"

Dear Brent and Brittney:

I recently saw a cartoon that made me chuckle—it was a hearse with a bike rack, towing a U-Haul trailer. The caption said, "I haven't seen a hearse pulling a U-Haul... no extra luggage beyond the cemetery point."

It's a funny image, but it carries a simple truth: I can't take any of my favorite things where I'm eventually going. However, I'm not quite ready for them to be "luggage" just yet.

Here is what I'd like for the items I've gathered in my condo:

1. Keep the Collection Whole: For now, I'd like for everything to stay right where it is. Consider the condo a library of my life—a place where my things can live on together.
2. Use and Enjoy: Please don't let these items sit under dust sheets. If there is a tool you need, a book you want to read, or a dish you'd like to use for a special dinner, please take it and enjoy it.
3. The "Library" Rule: All I ask is that when you're done using something, you bring it back "home" to the condo.

These things are just objects, but they are also the backdrop of our memories. By keeping them there, I hope the condo remains a place where you can both go to feel a little closer to me, even when the U-Haul has long since moved on.

I love you both dearly.
